DROWNING

His Legion buddies want a Carnegie Lifesaving medal for James H. Thoburn and so does almost everyone else in Carmel after his gallant efforts at saving life at the south end of Carmel beach last Saturday afternoon.

One Oakland boy of 17, William Vaught, was drowned, while his brother, Edley Vaught, Jr., 25, was saved through the prompt action of Thoburn who plunged into the surf fully clad to carry a board on which the elder young man was able to float until further rescuers arrived.

The man who was ultimately saved apparently was the first to get into difficulty, and his brother started to his aid—only to be drowned in the effort.

Thoburn, ex-mayor of Carmel, Legionnaire and Stanford football captain in 1913, entered the cold water without thought for himself. During the past year he has been warned against straining his heart and at his age, 49, few former athletes are anxious to dare the exposure which Thoburn did without thought of the consequences.

"But what would you have done if you had been there?" was Thoburn's answer when fellow Carmelites visited him at his real estate office this week to congratulate him.

Thoburn was with a client on Carmel Point at the time the two boys got into trouble as they swam in Cook's Cove just north of the first rocks at Carmel Point. The chauffeur in the car called his attention to the boys' shouts for help and Thoburn dashed out of the car to the nearest house and telephoned the Fire Department, and then found a board which might support a swimmer.

With this he ran for the beach and swam through the surf to one of the boys, who caught hold of it and thereby was able to keep from sinking. The brother had already disappeared.

Arrival of the Fire Department salvage wagon and Red Cross ambulance on the scene brought a number of young men to aid, among them Paul Brookshire, city employee at the beach during the summer, and Ray Hamilton, young carpenter, who volunteered to swim out with a line to Thoburn and Vaught, now being carried northward by the current.

Charles E. Strum, brother-in-law of the Vaught boys, who lives on Monte Verde near Thirteenth, was among those who attempted rescue. George West, Berkeley, a University of California student, and Fred Delaney, Los Angeles, a student at Pomona College, both with the R. O. T. C. at Camp Ord, aided.

As recently as June 26, 14-year-old Peter Boles of Piedmont, saved the lives of two girls of the same age at the same part of the beach. Here, under certain conditions of wave and tide, a current is formed just north of the rocky point and can give inexperienced or weak swimmers a bad scare. Neither of the Vaught boys was a strong swimmer, although both swam at the beach last summer and had spent a couple of weeks swim-

RESULT

The Carmel city council, spurred into action by the drowning of 17-year-old William Vaught of Oakland last Saturday, met this week to consider what action might be taken to prevent further loss of life.

Two surf boards and warning signs were immediately ordered as a preparedness measure.

Said James H. Thoburn, hero of the rescue of Vaught's elder brother, Edley Vaught, Jr., married and the father of a child: "I have been swimming on Carmel beach for years and I have never seen undertow or a rip-tide there. One year I never missed my daily swim."

Thoburn described currents and outflows, however, usually minor.

This concurred with a recent article in The Pine Cone immediately following the rescue of two 14-year-old girls in Cook's Cove by a Piedmont Boy Scout, Peter Boles, their same age, June 26.

Police Commissioner Frederick R. Bechdolt declared the entire beach to be dangerous and that the public should be warned.

Dr. Ferdinand Haasis, Carmel scientist, told of the dangers of Carmel beach, enumerating the following points:

1—Coldness of the water, between 50 and 63 degrees (highest in August).

2—Getting back through breakers often difficult.

3. Swimmers going in too soon after eating—at least two hours should elapse—few survive stomach cramps.

4—Kelp.

5—Channel at Tenth street causing currents.

6—Undertow.

Various remedies have been offered, ranging from signs at the beach, warning the public, to life guards, including a rowboat on a trailer with a trained crew and lifesaving boards with rope life line.

Action was deferred for an unofficial committee meeting with the Park Commission Tuesday at Monday's council meeting, because of the possible liability of the city if official action is taken. City Attorney William Luis Hudson was to report on this.

Action came at an informal meeting between the council and the city park commission with other interested persons on Tuesday afternoon. Two surf boards were ordered along with warning signs for the beach.

Those present included Councilmen Everett Smith, Clara Kellogg, Hazel Watrous and Frederick R. Bechdolt, Park Commissioner Chairman Corum Jackson, Dr. Ferdinand Haasis, James H. Thoburn, Street Superintendent William Askew, George Whitcomb, Police Chief Robert Norton and Inspector B. W. Adams.

It was decided that the surf boards and warning signs were of immediate necessity, that surf boats were valuable but secondary, and will come up again later at a meeting to be called by Jackson.

Few drownings at Carmel beach, however, could be recalled by old-

Carmel's Fifth Annual Bach Festival with five concerts, two organ recitals and five lectures on the pretentious program, opens Monday of next week and continues through to Sunday, July 23, in a feast of Bach music fashioned to gladden the heart of any Bach enthusiast.

A unique feature this year is the Sons of Bach music on this year's program. The concerts and lectures by Alfred Frankenstein will be in Sunset auditorium, while the final evening's B Minor Mass will be at Carmel Mission.

The Festival is fortunate in having Gastone Usigli as its conductor for the second time. Usigli came to America from Italy, where he was a conductor of opera. He was instantly recognized in New York and on the Pacific coast for what he was—a conductor of exceptional ability, a musician of integrity and prodigious knowledge, a composer of significance, and a figure distinguished in the music world.

Usigli's vast musicianship, his almost fanatical devotion to music combined with his inspired, intuitive understanding, have made him a conductor eminent throughout the country for his authoritative, commanding readings.

The following are notes on some of the leading musicians in the Bach Festival. Others will be included in next week's issue of The Pine Cone:

Alice Ehlers, renowned harpsichordist of Vienna, will play on the opening program of the Festival. Miss Ehlers has brought unalloyed delight to the capitals of the world where she has been heard on the harpsichord specially constructed for her use in Paris. She has given courses at Salzburg, Vienna, Berlin, Zurich and London, and has played in the music festivals of Vienna, Barcelona, London, Strassbourg and elsewhere. She broadcasted 50 sonatas of Scarlatti from London, and has been heard recently on the Kraft hour on the radio.

Alice Mock, coloratura soprano, comes to the Bach Festival for the third year. This great artist, with her high, pure soprano, was formerly with the Chicago Civic Opera, and is now singing for the motion pictures. She has sung in music festivals throughout the United States, the critic, Pierre Key, writing of her in Harrisburg, Pa., "Miss Mock's voice is pure crystal", while "La Petite Marseillaise" wrote of her, in Marseilles, "The opinion of the critics is unanimous in declaring that Alice Mock is a veritable revelation."

A RIOT ON THE RIVER or THREE BOYS AND A DOG

by
Oliver C. Bassett

THE LIGHT WENT OUT

I threw my pole down for now I could see that it was of little use. I racked my brains for some sort of a plan but could think of nothing. The banks were too rocky to try to land at the speed we were going and we could not take any chance of ruining the boat. Although there was no danger of being hurt, we would be swept back to our town and would be laughed at by every boy there and that I knew would be worse than death to Cheese.

"Well," I said, "we've got to do something quick or we'll be laughed at forever."

"Yeah," mumbled Dick, "say, where's that dog?"

"O forget it," broke in Cheese, "the anchor's gone so it's gone. He didn't mean to trip you anyhow. What we have to do is think and think fast!"

Then there was silence as we watched the boat slide slowly out of sight of where we were to camp that night.

"I know!" cried Cheese, jumping off the box on which he had been sitting, "it all depends on Joe!"

"Me?" I asked rather dazed.

"Yeah, sit still and listen. Down around the next two banks there's a pretty good-sized limb. I remember it because I wondered if it would miss the top of the cabin and it did by a good five feet. Now, Joe, this is where you come in. We'll tie that long rope to the boat and you take it up to the roof and grab the limb when she comes. We'll get the poles and try to hold the boat until you get it tied. Now," Cheese paused for breath, "you got that straight?"

"You mean I take the rope and tie her on the limb when she comes?" I gasped.

"That's right," said Cheese, "and when the boat stops we'll come about and pick you up."

"O. K." I said and got to my feet rather wobbly, "pass over the rope."

Cheese handed me the rope and said, "That's swell, Joe, now don't forget to hang on tight because it will be an awful jerk when the rope is pulled taut."

I scrambled up on the roof and the boat seemed as if it were going twice as fast as down below.

"Here she comes," Cheese called.

I turned and saw a limb rushing at me a little way down the river.

"Hey, Cheese," I called, "hurry up and get those poles, this baby's going awful fast."

"O. K." he shouted back and then to Dick, "grab those poles, we got to slow this bus down so J. S. can make it."

As I looked at the limb I saw that I would have to jump to reach it.

As far as we knew this would be the only way of stopping ourselves so I must not fail. I felt the boat slow a little but it still seemed to be going pretty fast.

I took the rope in one hand and as the limb came to me I leaped, grabbed it with my hand and pulled the rope after me with my other one.

All of a sudden the boat left me and I was dangling high above the muddy water that looked far below but I knew I must act swiftly, so grabbing the limb a little tighter, I tied the best knot I could at the moment.

Then when I saw the boat quickly drawing up the rope I tried to scramble on top of the limb. But before I could get there the rope drew taut and the branch leaped away from me. I threw out my hands in desperation but touched nothing.

I shut my eyes so I would not see the swirling water that was coming up at me with the speed of a bullet. After it seemed I would never stop falling I felt something close over my head and then there was darkness.

Oakland Teacher Takes Life Here With Car Fumes

Despondent because of long ill-health, Miss Bess Lou Farley, Oakland Americanization teacher, who had owned a home for many years on Dolores street between Second and Third with Miss Mary Spayde, also of Oakland, died in her fume-filled car at her home early Tuesday.

She had apparently been in the car for several hours when discovered. She was found when W. R. Moore, a neighbor, was called by Mrs. Esther Doherty, also of Oakland, to help search for the woman.

Deputy Coroner Sal Rancadore stated that all evidence pointed to a carefully planned death.

The two women had owned their home here for a dozen years, but Miss Spayde was in Yosemite at the time of the death.

Miss Farley was a member of the Oakland schools faculty and well known there as she was here. She left no known close relatives in this area.

Red Cross Ambulance Aids Aged Woman Hurt In Coast Road Crash

The Carmel Red Cross ambulance went down the coast to the Palo Colorado Sunday afternoon to aid 89-year-old Mrs. Clarisa Meier, who resides in Palo Colorado canyon, injured in a sideswiping car accident.

Mrs. Meier was riding with her daughter, Mrs. D. M. Barnwell, 50, when the machine skidded and charged up a bank after colliding with another machine.

Fred Mylar, Birney Adams and Albert Lockwood manned the ambulance. Reports on the accident were incomplete.

David Princes Parents of Son, Born July 9

To David and Dorothy Prince last Sunday was born a son. The Princes lived in Carmel for several years, where David was employed by La Playa Hotel. He is now owner-manager of three hotels in San Francisco, including the Commodore, and is a part owner of Robles del Rio.

The grandfather is Paul Prince, pioneer Carmelite, of the Carmel Development Company, and Mrs. Louise Murphy, now staying with Paul Prince here, is an aunt. There are three other grandchildren, all girls.

Three Cents Shaved From Carmel's Sanitary Rate

The Carmel sanitary district trustees found themselves able to reduce the sanitary tax rate from 15 to 12 cents for the coming year at a meeting in the office of Sanitary Assessor Bernard Rowntree on Thursday night of last week.

The rate of 12 cents per $100 of assessed valuation applies on taxable property in the district for the fiscal year 1939-40, and is expected to bring in approximately $6900 on a basis of an assessed valuation of $5,756,740. Estimated cost of operation, including the sewage disposal plant, is $6970.

An increased valuation of about $500,000 for the coming year made possible this reduction in the rate, according to the board, in setting the new tax rate.

Assessment roll of the district is based on and follows closely the county roll, according to the board. Efforts to effect a change in favor of Robinson Jeffers were made by Mrs. Jeffers and Attorney Argyll Campbell, who presented the Jeffers' case.

It was declared the Jeffers owned an entire block of 36 lots and that this should be classified as "block" instead of "lot" property and the assessment thereby reduced. They explained that a change in their favor by the sanitary board would help in pleading similarly before the county board of supervisors.

The wife of the famous poet declared that they had paid for sewers for years without benefit. The Jeffers' plea was rejected on the basis of a dangerous precedent.

The rate of $15 per lot for property owners outside the sanitary district for those who desire to become annexed to the district was set by the board last Friday night. The averred object is to make annexing property owners bear a share of the cost of the new sewage disposal plant now under construction on Carmel river.

Ross C. Millers to Launch Bakersfield Daily Paper

Newspaper drama is in the blood of Mr. and Mrs. Ross C. Miller, who formerly were part owners of The Pine Cone, and who in September will return to their old bailiwick, Bakersfield, to pioneer the morning newspaper field in that growing southern California city.

The Millers came to Carmel from Bakersfield several years ago, leaving the old established evening newspaper there to come to The Pine Cone. Ross Miller had been managing editor for several years and Thelma B. Miller had written for the paper for some time.

Shortly after Sept. 1, when the Millers will return to Bakersfield, the Kern Herald, now appearing twice a week, will become a full-fledged morning paper covering a city and county which has grown as fast as any in California in the past decade. Associated with Miller as third-interest partners will be Paul Newell, present owner of the Herald, and Edward Benson, former general manager of The Californian, of which Miller had been managing editor before coming here.

The Herald has been recapitalized as a $150,000 corporation.

Thelma Miller will also work on the paper.

With the Millers will go the best wishes of their fellow Carmelites for high success in their new venture.

Lou McIlvain, soprano, has sung much in opera and oratorio and, according to Harvey Gaul in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, has "a magnificent voice... great warmth, color and appeal."

Russell Horton, one of Southern California's leading tenors, has won acclaim in opera, concert, on the screen, radio, and oratorio. He has appeared as soloist with the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, with the Los Angeles and San Francisco Opera Company, with the American Opera Company, and throughout the Middle West and Pacific Coast in oratorio and in concert or opera. At home, Horton is soloist in the Fifth Church of Christ, Scientist, Los Angeles.

Edwin Dunning, bass, has made a special study of sacred music and oratorio, and last May he was awarded the Tito Schipa scholarship for coaching with Gennaro M. Curel, internationally renowned operatic coach.

Personnel of the Bach Festival includes many professionals and many local and visiting amateurs, especially the chorus, which has few professional performers.

County Aid Suggested for Beach Protection

Carmel Highlands, July 12, 1939.
Editor: The Carmel Pine Cone:
Dear Sir: We live outside the incorporated area of Carmel—as you know our homes are in Carmel Highlands—but despite this we are concerned over the tragedy of last Saturday and the near tragedies of a few weeks ago on Carmel beach.

Our thought is: Is it possible for the County of Monterey to cooperate with the City of Carmel in bearing a share of the expense of life-saving equipment, and, and, if necessary, life guards on Carmel beach?

A slight increase in the county tax rate is, in our minds, the merest detail as compared with the preservation of the life of our young people who will carry on when we are gone.

Redwood Trees' Secrets Problems for Scientists

The redwoods which have their southern limits southward of Carmel to a few miles below Salmon Creek in the Los Padres National Forest, provide science with some interesting and puzzling problems.

Their age and origin have long been discussed, and some new highlights are given by University of California scientists.

The long prevalent idea that the age of a redwood tree can be determined by the number of rings that the log may show, is not a reliable one, according to Professor Emmanuel Fritz of the University of California division of forestry.

In a study of discontinuous rings Professor Fritz says he came upon several logs which gave higher ages at the upper ends than at the butt ends, according to the ring count. On the butt ends the rings chanced to fall in areas where the cambium or soft formative wood tissue evidently had been dormant for a number of years, giving a deficiency in the number of rings as compared to actual age, and less, in some cases than the number at the top end. Shortly thereafter a similar discontinuity was found in old growth redwoods and this condition was later determined as a common one.

"Obviously to determine the age of an old-growth redwood tree, a count of rings on one radius may not give the full age," Professor Fritz said. "A thorough examination of the entire surface must be made, including a search for locally discontinuous rings to avoid confusion with false rings. Then it may be necessary to count the rings on one radius for a certain distance and to move along a ring to another radius." Two different trees examined gave a half dozen different age counts each, he said.

Evidence that a number of well known tree species, including the redwoods, migrated for thousands of miles in great shifts from unfavorable to favorable growing conditions and environment, was presented recently to the 23rd annual meeting of the Pacific Division, the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Stanford by Dr. Ralph W. Chaney, chairman of the department of paleontology, University of California. In past time California has been occupied by forests unlike those of today, Dr. Chaney said. The environs of San Francisco Bay were covered by a bald cypress similar to that now growing in the gulf states. The Sierra foothills grew a sub-tropical vegetation similar to that of Mexico and Central America.

Carmel Pine Cone Editor:

Perhaps among your readers there is some young person in her twenties who enjoys writing and reading letters and who would like to correspond with someone in Hawaii.

I am an English-American, 27 years old, single, employed by a branch of the Territorial government. I am very fond of music. I enjoy beautiful scenery, good books, motion pictures and concerts. I am not active in nor interested in sports. I enjoy hiking. I am interested in science, the arts, philosophy and photography.

It would be a pleasure to write about Hawaii and in turn to read another's impressions of things and events in that part of California.

I will appreciate it very much if you can find space in your columns for this letter.

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

A felelr, even in a half-way doze and with one eye shut, he can see some odd things.

And what I got in mind, is this excitement down there in Wash., about being scared about a shortage of electricity in case of war.

This country, she is oozing with power. The Govt., it has been building dams and putting up wires on every mountain top, river and creek. And some of them are now finished, like on the Columbia, and Wash. is sitting up nights trying to induce or inveigle somebody into going out there and use the surplus—but nobody shows up.

And in Nebraska, the state it is getting round-shouldered from power.

ward along the coast of Alaska then southward to Siberia and China, has revealed several major forest migrations. These appear to have resulted from changes in rainfall and temperature, and it is not unreasonable to predict that similar changes in climate may occur in the future, Dr. Chaney said.

The redwoods did not appear in California until a comparatively late geologic period had set in, their first habitat having been the Arctic regions. Forests of eastern United States, notably the beech and the maple, also migrated from the Arctic in the same manner.

An understanding of the factors which have controlled forest distribution in the past may enable us to more fully understand the vegetation of today, and to more effectively utilize our land, both for timber and food crops.

And in Tennessee, they are about flooded since the Govt. edged into the business there, on a grand scale. But the Govt. pays no taxes—and the folks there, they have to make up the difference—and it is not so pleasant. Trying to figure out why the stripes go round and round on a zebra, instead of lengthwise, it is kinda confusing, but trying to savvy what the Govt. will do next, it is more so.

Yours, with the low down,

JO SERRA.

SOME EXPERIENCES OF A SOUTH SEAS CRUISE by the Gallatin Powers

Gallatin and Lynn Powers, in their sailing ketch, Otter, are having the times of their lives in the Tuamotu or Low Archipelago of the South Seas. They have now left the high, volcanic Marquesas between 8 and 10 degrees south and have gone south southwest to Tepoto which is 14 degrees south and 141 degrees, 30 minutes west.

They landed at Tepoto, a coral island with a guardian reef and no inlet to the lagoon, in tiny outriggers, and thought they were on Napuka eight miles away — because of the strong island currents which set them off their course. Already some sand, apparently composed of bits of coral and shells, from Tepoto has gone to friends of the Powers and subscribers to their "Sailmates" plan, a unique and interesting way of giving us a genuine first-hand view of at least a part of the South Sea Islands.

The people of the Tuamotu are more attractive than the Marquesans, according to the Powers, especially because of their better teeth, which the Powers suspect may be attributable to their more mixed diet, which includes rather more fish and meat, although they live on islands which grow nothing but coconuts.

Going ashore over the coral reef was no mean feat. The Powers write: "Then we saw one of the most interesting and exciting things that we had seen on our voyage. Three canoes were preparing to come out from shore to escort us to our anchorage. We watched the natives pull their canoes down from the beach onto the reef. Then they waded out toward the edge of the reef in two or three feet of water, pulling their canoes with them. They went close to the edge of the reef and stood there, sometimes waist deep in water, holding their canoes and waiting for the wave on which they could launch their boats over the side and into the sea. Two or three heavy waves hit them as they stood there, and it seemed as though they would be knocked down and their canoes washed away from them, but they still waited. They knew that a miscalculation would be costly, if not fatal. To go over the edge of the reef when there was not enough time between waves would mean being swept back against the sharp coral. Finally there was a large swell without any wave close behind it, and into this swell they launched their canoes, pushing the little outriggers over the edge, leaping inside, and paddling violently to get away from the reef's edge before the water was sucked down under it. Our hearts were beating a little faster than usual. Soon we would have to go over this same reef to get ashore."

"Walking up to the beach from the wave-swept reef was in fact entering a strange new world. There was not a plant or shrub visible, and no vestige of dirt or soil in which plants could grow—only rocky lumps of white coral and coconut trees everywhere. There were a few brown coconut leaf huts under the trees and groups of native people standing on the beach and watching us.

"The island was even more barren and primitive than we had anticipated. Many of the women wore only pareu skirts and had on nothing above the waist. There was not a white man on the island, though some of the children and younger people were obviously of mixed blood.

"We were surprised to see a handsomer people than the Marquesans. The chief reason for their better appearance was that a good proportion of the natives here have their front teeth. It seemed strange to us at first that they would have better teeth than the Marquesans, considering the unfavorable living conditions and absence of fruit and vegetables in the Tuamotus. The answer seems to be that the Marquesans live chiefly on fruit and coconuts. Fishing in and about the Marquesas is not nearly as good as in the Tuamotus, nor is the necessity for catching fish as great, and as one old Marquesan fellow had

"When we arrived at the chief's house, we found him to be a pleasant old native, slightly darker than the average Polynesian, with a face like a friendly old Saint Bernard. He offered us each a young drinking coconut—true south sea hospitality, and as one old Marquesan fellow had put it, the "champagne de pays." The chief showed us over his house and had his son-in-law explain that the people on the island had long since run out of flour, sugar, salt, coffee, and in fact all the things that we would consider necessities.

(The Powers asked for a dance). "Then the chief stood up and started to talk again. This time he talked for ten minutes, pacing up and down the wooden porch, gesticulating and speaking in a tone that would match any of our oratorical offerings. Again he stopped, and again absolutely nothing happened. Our impatience was beginning to overcome our newly acquired Polynesian philosophy, which is that there isn't anything to hurry about, because it doesn't matter when you accomplish anything if it doesn't even matter whether you accomplish it. Well, this process of talk-by-the-hour-and-do-nothing went on and on. The chief and his special party consumed another bottle of wine in order that they might be encouraged to go on encouraging

"Never had we realized quite so clearly how life could center around one lowly fruit. Without the coconut, life in Tepoto couldn't exist. The natives eat the coconut in all its stages, from the small green nut, so immature that they can eat all of the husk, to the mature coconut from which they scrape the hard meat to provide food for themselves and their animals. Imagine dogs, cats, chickens and pigs eating coconut! At home a dog wouldn't look at a coconut, but here the animals can't be so particular.

"The number of native uses for the coconut is amazing. In addition to feeding themselves and their animals, the natives use the coconut water for drinking, the dried coconut shells for containers, and the coconut oil to rub their bodies and in their hair. The trees give them shade from the burning tropical sun. They use the wood from the trees to give them supports for their coconut houses as well as to make their canoes. The leaves they use for the walls and roofs. In ancient times they used the bark of the coconut tree as well as the braided leaves to make their clothing, and today the only commercial product that the Tepotans have in the world is the dried coconuts, or copra.

"The Tepotan diet consists almost entirely of fish and coconuts. When the people have access to supplies they like to make a sort of coconut bread baked with flour. They also use coffee, rice and a few other staple commodities. From time to time they kill a few chickens or pigs. There are also large numbers of dogs on the island, and we were soon told that these dogs are raised to be eaten. The French have passed a law forbidding the natives to eat dog, and in most of the Tuamotus where there is more frequent contact with trading vessels the custom no longer exists.

"Tepotan life is amazingly simple. While many of the natives are nominally Catholics, there is neither church nor missionary on the island. Amongst themselves no one is ambitious and no one is acquisitive. Life is cut down to unembellished essentials. The natives are probably more contented with the few things they have than most of their civilized brothers who have a great deal more. This is partly because they seldom see people who have more than they, and partly because the Polynesians as a race seem to be singularly unenterprising.

"Before supper we walked down to the end of the little row of houses. There we found a deep well—a hole with the top built up by coral blocks. Sitting close to the well were two native women searching carefully through each other's hair. Every few moments one of them would pick something from the scalp of her friend and then put it into her mouth. We were reminded unpleasantly of monkeys in a zoo, and the similarity was even more unpleasant when we later learned that the natives pick lice from each other's heads, and then eat them for the sweet taste. No one can deny the educational value of travel!"

That night the Powers slept in the chief's European bed. "From the first moment that we crawled into bed our troubles began. There was only one pillow and what a pillow! We finally dispensed with the

THANKS, JIM THOBURN

No man courageous enough to chance the laying down of his life for a fellow man in dire distress likes to be called a hero.

Jim, appreciating your modesty, we would like to think that we, too, would display the same courage that you did last Saturday afternoon should we ever find ourselves in a similar position.

You did a grand job, such as anyone the world over would be proud of. You want no praise, you being you; however, you have endeared yourself to many for a proven quality so few of us know if we possess.

WE'VE GOT TO COME TO IT

Everybody seems to be well satisfied with the recent developments in the school board. There is a feeling that the board as now constituted represents all groups in Carmel and that with this proper representation school affairs will proceed rapidly and without controversy. The recent concern, now settled, over the appointment of the two additional trustees to the school board has started a movement which may well be a step in the right direction for Carmel. We note that there has entered into the discussions a group of residents who have been rarely heard from and who in the past seldom stirred themselves from their sports and cultural activities. We have reference to the large group of retired and semi-retired residents who pay a large bulk of the taxes in this town. These men in the past may have been rather quick to criticize the expenditure of money and the other policies of the City Council but have never taken an active or working interest in Carmel. Now, fortunately, they are realizing that they, too, owe the village in which they live a certain amount of civic duty and that the only way this debt of theirs can be paid is to give active service to the town.

Any observer of local governmental administration is staggered by the heavy amount of detail work and grief that falls to the five citizens we elect to sit on our board of councilmen.

We sometimes fail to realize that although each councilman is selected by the mayor to represent a certain civic department, it does not mean that that particular department then falls under direct control of the councilman chosen to head it. The commissioner of health and safety has just as much to say in police policies as does the commissioner of that department. All too often this is forgotten. The commissioner of streets has just as much right in the administration of the fire department as its chairman or any other councilman. The city council is supposed to be a policy-forming board as a whole, but is not the commission form of government.

We are not criticizing the present council or boards in the past, in fact, we firmly believe that anyone who serves on the city council of Carmel is doing so because of a fine spirit of civic duty.

Serving on the city council is a hard task requiring tact, a thick skin and a large capacity for hard work with no thanks. The city council should be a policy-forming board, keeping a watchful eye on all city affairs, allocating funds to various departments and coordinating public relations with good city administration.

A capable city manager should, we believe, be employed to carry out the wishes of the city council.

Carmel has grown large enough to create this office of city manager. Men trained in city administration are available. Their salaries vary but in almost every case towns which have adopted this form of government have found that the city manager has been able to more than pay the amount of his salary

HILL AND SKY

*Where lies the hill against the sky, so near
 That every curve is followed line for line,
 Each by the other tenderly and dear,
 I see a run of light arise and shine.
 Long have I wondered, gazing from the field,
 Why, though I saw it clearly, this was so;
 The singing flame the touch of sky would yield
 Along the darker heights . . . and now I know.*

*There could not be a hill without the sky
 To mark its outline perfectly in space.
 There would not be a form to know it by,
 To give dimension and an earthly place.
 Thus do they each unto the other give
 The kiss of light, and through each other live!*

A CLEAR SONG TO SING

*From the closed garden
 Where the winds walk slow
 And fruited branches bend,
 Past oak and pine and pool
 Our warm thoughts go
 To seek you out, oh friend!*

*Yours be all treasure
 Of the turning year,
 From growing time to seed,
 Ripe golden grain
 And finest wheaten bread
 To feed your inmost need.*

*And for your thirst
 Fountains of crystal dew
 To lift the drooping wing,
 And juice of dusky grapes
 And skies of blue
 And a clear song to sing.*

NOSTALGIA

*A silver shining beach where tall pines rise
 Beneath the moon—
 And music of unbroken silences
 Save for the croon
 Of warm, voluptuous waves—oh I am fain
 To find that silver-circled beach again.
 Warm are the scarlet flowers, and the night
 A long caress.*

*Almost I hear those waters whispering
 That gently press.
 Against the gleaming sands—almost can see
 Those palms against the moon's gold mystery.
 O little silver beach where tall palms rise
 Beneath a topaz moon!*

VALE

*I am away to curious harbours
 Beyond the reach of little ships.
 My hands shall clasp lightnings
 My feet shall walk burning sands!*

through careful city management.

When Carmel's administrative details are placed in the hands of a city manager and the council has no longer to run around endeavoring, on top of their own affairs, to supervise a city department and help to administer the city council affairs as a whole, a wealth of fine material will come forward to serve in the dignified position of a city councilman.

LIFE SAVING AT THE BEACH

Once again it has been brought home to Carmelites that something must be done to minimize the danger present in the welcoming surf at Carmel Beach.

For years, the excuse that to do anything at all would make the city liable for damages has been used. Now it is time to face the moral issue of whether Carmel should do something to help save a life or to go on doing absolutely nothing.

The dangers of swimming at Carmel beach are well known to all who make a practice of swimming there, and usually, forewarned is forearmed for those of experience, but it is those who go into the water without knowing the dangers and those who get into some unforeseen trouble that we must endeavor to protect. It is no longer enough to say that legal considerations make it impossible for us to do anything until there is an actual drowning or a swimmer is imperiled, possibly imperiling other lives, in attempting to save the drowning person, and then we must act.

Actually, under the present conditions, far more lives are in danger, because, as happened last Saturday, several persons went to the rescue of the two young visitors who were in trouble, and, because of lack of equipment, at least five other persons took their lives in their hands in assisting.

It is not because of "rip tides", undertow, (we have James H. Thoburn's word for it!) heavy surf, or that Carmel beach is dangerous. It is more the fact that the water is cold, that the surf may frequently be confusing to inexperienced swimmers, and that certain minor currents may frighten them so badly that they get excited and struggle instead of swimming slowly and with cool heads until help comes. There is, of course, the danger at certain times of going in when the surf is too heavy for successful swimming; and there is always the possibility of non-swimming waders being swept by a heavy wave out beyond their depth.

Because any one of these dangers is present, it is absolutely necessary that something be done to counteract it. One step in this direction might well be the placing of warning signs at crucial points, although we don't like any more than anyone else does, signs cluttering up the beach or the village. Another step would be to provide floats which a swimmer could carry out to a sinking person and a strong, light line to connect the float with shore, the line fitted with corks to keep it from getting entangled in kelp.

Yet another step in aiding future persons in distress would be a life-saving rowboat with equipment which a trained group of Carmel's young men who are strong swimmers and able to learn to use a boat in the surf could man. Such a boat on a trailer which could be pulled across the sand or towed behind a car along Scenic Drive in an emergency might prove itself invaluable.

The city need not take all these steps, in case of liability should there be any doubt about the law, but could delegate them unofficially to the Carmel Red Cross or to the new Carmel Youth Progressive Association, a group of young men, some of whom performed valuable service at the beach last Saturday. A boat for them to practice with and to use in emergency would be combining good experience, fun and a public service in time of need.

The load of assisting in such cases should be taken off the volunteers of the Fire Department who are interested in and trained for fire fighting and have enough on their hands to do the excellent job they perform. Perhaps the Youth Progressive group will find this a rallying point and an activity to occupy a considerable portion of their time in performing a valuable public service.

As for having a lifeguard at the beach, this would present both a costly and a difficult matter. The beach is too long for one lifeguard alone to do an effective job, and the common summer condition of the surf would make it difficult for one lifeguard to handle a boat effectively. The other remedies probably present a more nearly practical solution to the problem of the moment: Making Carmel beach as safe as possible.

HILL AND SKY

Dora Hagemeyer's sonnet which leads off our poetry column for the week, was awarded by Westward, International Magazine of Verse, its Wreath of Distinction for July. In voicing appreciation of the poem, Westward praises its inspirational conception and the poet's refreshing viewpoint, in these days of perilous peace.

their property, bought many years ago, after crowding homes and the necessity for sewers raised assessments and taxes on their property.

Whether a poet could be regarded as a community institution like the Peninsula Community Hospital, for instance, which received certain taxation benefits from the Sanitary District, or not, was discussed.

Robinson Jeffers said a few words of thanks and together the Jeffers departed with their attorney without much success in arguing with a Sanitary Board which was only trying to be fair with all comers.

$2,200,000 Reduction Made In Gas and Light Bills Over Broad Base

Every domestic and commercial electric customer in every municipality served by Pacific Gas & Electric Company, will share in the $2,200,000 reduction in rates, effective July 1, President Ray C. Wakefield of the California Railroad Commission revealed recently when the new rate schedules were made public.

"We have placed the savings, resulting from the commission's investigation, where we believe they would afford the greatest benefit to the greatest number of people served by the utility," he said.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

Granddaughters of the late Henri Escole, rancher and large landowner of Monterey county whose holdings included what later became the original townsite of Carmel, Adele and Helen Escole, of Mountain View, and their mother, Mrs. Charles B. Escole, are now living in the Log Cabin on Lincoln street.

Any Carmel old timer immediately will cock an ear when the name of Escole is mentioned, for Henri Escole, a Frenchman who emigrated to this country, came to Carmel before it was anything more on the map than a large ranch on a bay near Carmel Mission. He became lord of this paradise as well as of extensive ranches in other parts of the county, where the family still owns land near Gonzales and Santa Maria.

Like many of the old land-owning families who kept abreast of the times, the Escolles live in a country home near Los Altos and continue to derive income from the land they own, in spite of new waves of population, changing economic order and industrialization. The last threat has been in the form of the big cement plant which is going in near Los Altos. The Escolles fought the plant along with the residents of this beautiful valley area, but lost, with the small consolation that perhaps the cement dust will not cover the landscape as it does at Davenport on the Santa Cruz coast because of new methods of dust control.

Among the many members of the Escole family still residing in this country is Mrs. Alice White of Monterey, a daughter of Henri Escole, who lives in an adobe on Hartnell street.

Greer Garson, English-born Hollywood screen actress, has been spending some free time on the peninsula, with occasional visits to Carmel shops with her mother. Several days ago, they ventured to sea on Hilary Belloc's launch, Sea Hawk, from Stillwater Cove.

Miss Garson's latest creation is the feminine lead in "Goodbye, Mr. Chips", now showing in San Francisco, and she is preparing for a major production.

On the Sea Hawk, flame-haired Miss Garson declared valiantly: "I come of Viking stock, so I know I won't get seasick." A few minutes later, it is reported, Miss Garson did not feel so boastful.

Checking up on Franklin Nordhoff, brother of Author Charles Nordhoff of Nordhoff and Hall fame, (Mutiny on the Bounty, Hurricane, Dark River, etc.), we discover that his family owns or owned large land areas in southern California, that Franklin, although he lives in Santa Barbara where his brother's part-Tahitian daughters went to school, would rather be on his extensive ranch in Lower California which borders the Pacific ocean for a score of miles.

Franklin Nordhoff was a recent visitor here, while on the way to Palo Alto, where his brother's daughters were at school during the past year.

According to our informant, this Nordhoff, like his brother, has been something of a rebel, spent a year or so at no more profitable an occupation than beachcombing.

Some time ago George Smith, who takes photographs for the Pine Cone shot a few scenes of a group of Sunset school children at work putting out the annual school number of the Pine Cone.

One of the photographs, showing Lila Whitaker, Joan Newman, Anne Pierce, "Sunny" Cook, Marilen Bridenbecker, Anne Markham, John Todd, Jack Gansel and Gordon Miyamoto, was published in the Christian Science Monitor June 30 along with a story on the origin of the Sunset edition of The Pine Cone under the presiding grace of Perry Newberry, late editor.

Perry Newberry frequently played an important part in directing the annual children's play at the Forest Theater and it was natural that, always interested in the children of the community, Perry should have taken them into The Pine Cone one week each year.

Along with the photograph of the "reporters" at "work" the Monitor carried a story on this unique feature of The Pine Cone.

Expecting any day to be "Lieutenant Commander" John Williams Murphy is the husband of Louise Prince Murphy, daughter of Paul Prince of Carmel. Murphy is on duty with the 300-foot U. S. Navy submarine "Snapper" which recently went to Honolulu, and, having passed his examinations, is awaiting his new rank.

Paul Prince was also a "sea dog" in his day, but with the Coast Guard instead of the Navy and saw duty in Maine with the thermometer below zero and the Aleutian Islands and Behring Sea with great gales of wind a-blowing.

Una Jeffers spoke for Robinson Jeffers at a recent Sanitary Board meeting at which the Jeffers asked relief from their heavy burden of sewer taxation on their home, Tor House, and its 36 lots of surrounding land on Carmel Point.

Said Mrs. Jeffers in behalf of the poet: "God himself could not have connected our sewers with the main line in all those years. We had only the smell and no good in 20 years of paying."

Said Attorney Argyll Campbell, pleading for the Jeffers: "Poets are not plutocrats, unless this is the exception."

Added Mrs. Jeffers: "Our business needs a certain amount of beauty for us to do our stuff." She was explaining why the Jeffers had clung to

Police Radio All Set; Officers In Touch with Office

Carmel's police force is augmented this week by two-way radio communication — strengthening the strong arm of the law.

Any night Officer Bob Walton can be heard instructing the patrolman on duty, or receiving reports from the outlying darkness.

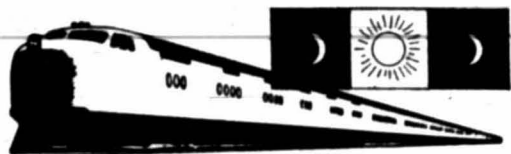

The central station is virtually complete and so is the system with all but one of the cars to be equipped with sending and receiving sets.

The cost is around $2600 for the 33,100 frequency Person-De Lane radio system. The home station is KGFI.

Everyone is pleased, especially Police Commissioner Frederick R. Bechtolt and Chief Robert Norton, who feel that at last Carmel is doing about all it can do right now to protect life and property and to subdue crime.

DEED: Charles S. Stanton to Del Monte Properties Co. May 11. Lot 20, Blk. 200, 2nd Add. to Carmel Woods.

All around the floor and along the walls were lizards and cockroaches by the hundreds. The distracting buzz of mosquitos was all around, emphasized by bites every now and then.

"We were too warm and there wasn't enough air in our room. Again we closed our eyes and hearing a step on the porch quickly opened them again. A young girl walked into our room. We could see her quite clearly from the reflection of the moonlight. She was only partly dressed. She took something out of a box on the other side of the room, and without looking at us she went out again. In a few minutes the chief opened the door from the other room in the house and looked in at us. Then he shut the door again. Two or three other people did the same thing. . . .

"And then we heard a noise under the bed. It was a peculiar sort of rustling and scratching noise. . . . We decided that we were too tired to find out what it was. . . .

"At five in the morning, with the first signs of dawn, the parade through our room began again with renewed vigor, probably half of the village (of 50 souls) had walked back and forth in the fifteen minutes before we got out of bed. No one seemed to think anything of walking through the room, glancing at us, and then walking on. We dressed with some difficulty, feeling very much as though we were doing it in

New York's Central Park. And then, our curiosity getting the better of us, we both leaned down and looked under the bed.

"There, settled comfortably on an old straw hat, was a fat, red hen. "Affectionately,

California Guide Proves State's Own Encyclopedia

A year or two ago they called the the unborn "California Guide", Hopper's Bazaar. That was rather unkind comment upon the work of the Federal Writer's Project of the Works Progress Administration in preparing an omnibus of knowledge regarding the second biggest state in the Union. For Northern California, James Hopper of Carmel was "the boss."

Jimmy Hopper's signature, however, is more permanently written into the body of the work, an unexpectedly able and well written Guide to a State of many wonders, varied history, diversified population, and color unequalled in the other 47 states. Notably is the chapter on the history of the press in California authoritative and succinct.

From cursory reading here and there in the Guide, it is at once apparent that the mistakes—and in such a comprehensive book written by many hands, more than a few of them it may be said unqualifiedly hardly those of writers in the sense of skilled writers, mistakes are bound to occur—are mostly of exceedingly minor nature and smacking of the non-western origin of some of the writers. For example, this reviewer takes it to heart when a California fishing boat is called a "smack"; we simply don't have "smacks" on this coast. Noyo, on the northern coast near Fort Bragg, is not settled largely by Italians. The Italian fishing fleet of San Francisco happened to be in the river at the time the observer drove past.

There is so much of worth and value to Californians, as well as to the tourists from elsewhere, in the Guide, that the price of $2.50 is insignificant. Every newcomer to this state should have the Guide as required reading. In the last 20 years, too many people have come to live in this state without bothering to learn anything regarding its background or its qualities. They have too easily absorbed the chamber of commerce information carried in the Los Angeles Times, and in the press releases from various allied sources, and have let it go at that.

The Guide is handsomely illustrated with a wide and critically chosen selection of photographs, which do not fail to give a fairly balanced composite view of the California of today.

The Guide is obtainable at the Village Book Shop and was loaned for review by Mrs. Fry and Miss Griffin.

There will be enchiladas, pies, salads, cake, cookies and other things guaranteed to make the mouth water.

The lovely garden and patio of the home of Mrs. Cecil Haskell on north Monte Verde street was the setting for the annual picnic luncheon of La Collecta Club last Wednesday afternoon. Sixteen members and one guest were present on this occasion. Following luncheon the newly-elected president, Mrs. D. E. Nixon, called the meeting to order and reports on the programs and hostesses for the coming six months were presented by the program chairman, Mrs. Mildred Melrose. Mrs. Nellie Leyman was admitted to the membership of the club. The program consisted of an amusing reading by Mrs. Nixon of an act by Arline Harris of the garrulous tongue in the radio world. Following that Mrs. Sara Lawrence told the club of the amazing home of "Borax Smith" in Oakland where she has been a frequent visitor. The next meeting will take place on July 19 at the home of Mrs. V. Gansel.

Settled in the Condon home in Hatton Fields are Colonel and Mrs. George Washington Stuart, who have recently come here from Oklahoma City where Colonel Stuart was chief of staff of the Forty-fifth division of the Southwest National Guard. Mrs. Stuart has at some period of her life called home a great many places in the world such as London, Paris and Singapore, as her father was with the foreign service. Now that Colonel Stuart has retired they have decided that Carmel will be their permanent address and plan to build a home here in the near future.

The Lloyd Weer and the Al Sparks families spent last week-end camping at Big Sur and report that they had a fine time eating and sleeping in the open, and returned at least five pounds heavier than when they left Carmel.

Dr. and Mrs. George J. Taylor are occupying their Carmel home. They have just returned from a world cruise which included visits to South America, Tristan da Cunha, Cape-town, and Europe. Dr. and Mrs. Taylor are the parents of Mrs. Richard Masten and Mrs. Eleanor Taylor James of Carmel.

Back in Carmel again is Mrs. Richard Masten, but her young daughter, Moira, who was born on June 27, is still in San Francisco. She likes the St. Francis Hospital so well that she thinks that she will stay for an extra two weeks before coming down to her Carmel Highlands home. In the meantime the whole Masten family is preparing a big reception for the young lady when she finally deigns to join them.

Miss Mai Simpson of Beverly Hills will arrive on Sunday to spend two weeks in Carmel as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Al Sparks.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Oden of Carmel Valley went to Pasadena this week to bring Mrs. Oden's mother back here to spend some time with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Wurzmann left last week-end for the Tahoe country where they will spend two weeks' vacation. While they are away their young daughter, Renee, will remain in Carmel with her grandmother, Mrs. Robert T. Legge, who has come down from Berkeley to take care of her.

Back in their North Carmel home are Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Winter and their daughter, Sylvia. The Winters have been in Ensenada, Baja California, for the last six weeks. While there they entered into the local sport of finding out what a movie was all about. It seems it is a little confusing to really enjoy a picture in the Mexican town as it is seldom that both the sound machine and the projector work in unison. Either the actors are soundlessly mouthing sweet nothings or else loudly shouting their lines with no pictures. The Winters are glad to be back here and plan to remain permanently.

Elwood Graham's Work in Color Seen in Exhibit

Those who are interested in seeing what is actually being done in art by one of the younger peninsula artists should visit Tilly Polak's where the work of Elwood Graham, who studied for five years at Washington University before coming here to live, is being exhibited.

Graham worked for two years with Gordon Bennett Grant on one of the largest tempera murals in the country, the murals in the Ventura post office, and has also exhibited in the Middle West and in southern California.

Graham's paintings reflect his personal approach to this coast country and color and rhythm predominate as structural elements over the traditional use of form in his work.

The exhibit will be shown during the rest of the month and possibly into August.

Frankenstein to Be Heard in Bach Lecture Series

Alfred Frankenstein, eminent music critic for the San Francisco Chronicle, will again, to the great delight of all of last year's season ticket-holders, be the lecturer for the Festival. Frankenstein's matchless summaries of the life, works, and musical significance of John Sebastian Bach will never be forgotten by those who had the good fortune to hear the eminent music critic a year ago. Repeated requests for his return have bombarded the office of the management of the Festival.

Frankenstein might well be called a "music-ologist." Since coming to the Pacific Coast after working for the Chicago Tribune, three years of teaching at the University of Chicago, and his musical editorship for the Review of Reviews Corporation, he has lectured frequently for the University of California and Stanford University, and other organizations, written solid music criticism for the San Francisco Chronicle, and written copiously for himself. His writing has culminated in an important piece of research regarding the famous "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky, which appears in the July issue of the "Musical Quarterly."

Frankenstein's lectures for the Bach Festival begin next Tuesday morning at 11 in Sunset Auditorium. His subjects are as follows:

Tuesday: The Sons of Bach
Wednesday: The Orchestral Music
Thursday: Chamber Music, Phoebe and Pan, Organ Music
Friday: The B Minor Mass.

All season ticket-holders are admitted to the Frankenstein lectures without further charge.

'Paisano Party' Del Monte Affair for Week Tonite

Even the somnolent Danny, central figure of John Steinbeck's famous book, would be excited about the gossip that is being exchanged these days over the back fences of Tortilla Flat.

It seems that there is going to be a real paisano party at the big hotel over the hill. It's set for next Friday night and will be held in the Ball Room.

It won't be confined to the people of Tortilla Flat, residents of the Monterey peninsula and of San Francisco will be there; but it is the paisanos who are going to provide the entertainment and the atmosphere.

Jeans and gingham will replace tuxedos and evening dresses and the older and more tattered the costumes the more they will be in keeping with the spirit of the party.

Taking a tip from Danny, Freddie Nagel and his coast-to-coast radio orchestra will play sprawled out on the orchestra stand dressed in blue jeans and wearing straw hats.

As a further atmospheric touch the Ball Room is being redecorated with scenes reminiscent of Steinbeck's book by Bruce Ariss, bearded Monterey Peninsula artist.

The charge for dinner and dancing will be $2.50 with a $1 cover charge for those not dining. Reservations should be made in advance in order to avoid disappointment.

'Hardys Ride High' In Sixth of Series at Carmel Theater

"The Hardys Ride High", sixth of the screen series dealing with the family of Judge Hardy (Lewis Stone), is showing at the Carmel Theater Sunday to Tuesday.

The new picture is different in every respect from the others, but the beloved Hardys remain the same. Now they inherit $2,000,000 and move to Detroit to claim it. On the plane, their changed status first affects Aunt Milly, played by Sara Haden, and she falls for a business man who is a fellow passenger.

In Detroit, overcome by sudden wealth, Mickey Rooney, in his role as Andy Hardy, steps out and falls desperately in love with a chorus girl, Virginia Grey. Marian Hardy (Cecilia Parker) orders lavish gowns and charges them to the Judge.

Only Judge Hardy and his wife (Fay Holden) maintain their equilibrium. In the end they return to their home town, poor but none the worse for their interlude.

"Dream of Love," based on the life of the famous musical composer, Franz Liszt, will accompany the feature Sunday, Monday and Tuesday at Carmel Theater.

Cronin's 'Citadel' Featured Screen Play at Filmarte

"The Citadel", A. J. Cronin's dramatically powerful story of a young doctor who barters his ideals for world riches, plays at the Filmarte theater this evening and tomorrow. Robert Donat and Rosalind Russell take the lead roles, those of the doctor and his wife, about whom centers a great romance.

Opening Sunday and continuing until Tuesday at the Filmarte is "Grand Illusion", pick of the 1938 films, with Erich von Stroheim and Jean Gabin, a French masterpiece. In a leisurely but thrilling fashion, "Grand Illusion" tells the story of two French officers held captive behind the enemy lines during the last war. Their captor (magnificently played by Eric von Stroheim) is also an aristocrat and out of this fact grows a strong friendship between the French and German career officers. They are still, however, enemies.

Next Wednesday and Thursday, "Drake the Pirate", is scheduled at the Filmarte.

Carmel Girl Scouts In Camp at Big Sur

Eleven Carmel Girl Scouts went to camp at Big Sur last week and four more are joining them for the final week of Girl Scout camp this weekend.

Those of Carmel Troop No. 2, of which Mrs. Ernest Morehouse and Mrs. Talbert Josselyn are the leaders, now in camp are Barbara Josselyn, Barbara Timmins, Doris Lewis, Patricia Flynn, Mary Jean Elliott, Carol Louise Walker, Alice Morehouse, Joan Dekker, Martha Moller, Anne Hodgson and Barbara Myler.

Going to camp this week-end for one week only are Alyce Holm, Betty Smith, Betty Lake of Toledo, Ohio, and Peri Koehler.

The girls are enjoying a program with a wide range of activity at Big Sur, details of which have been published earlier in this column.

'Tatters' Revival Opens at First Theater Tonight

An entirely new "Tatters, the Pet of Squatters' Gulch" is promised by the Troupers of the Gold Coast over at California's First Theater in Monterey for this evening and continuing until Sunday night.

Although this will be the 22nd revival of "Tatters", a great favorite and one brought back by popular demand, this time "Tatters" will be an entirely revamped show with Jessie Joan Brown, the Troupers' "discovery" of the year, playing the title role.

"Tatters" is none other than "Titania Timberlake", to give her full name. Miss Brown is supported by George Smith, as Major Timberlake, with another sterling and experienced performer, Gordon Knoles as Robert Ferris, a half-breed Indian.

Milt Latham, who has not been back since the "schnitzelbank" was a knockout number in the olio, returns to play John Marston, and Billy Shepard, who was outstanding in "Ten Nights in a Barroom", returns as Phil Dolan, a squatter. Bob Bratt, one of the peninsula's stellar comedians, plays the part of the other squatter, Abe Witherspoon.

Add to this Louis Dubin as Mose Lilyblossom, servant at the Gulch; Verne Williams, doing double duty as Jacob Kent, a land speculator, and as Sheriff Gorgas; Del Page as Sneed Hern, Betty Bryant as Mrs. Timothy Timberlake, and Melba Hodges as Clementina Fairlace.

Besides "Tatters", there is the excellent olio, with Billy McConnell, Winifred Howard, Ellen Skadan, Connie Bell, and Everett "Spud"

Gray, the fast-talking man of information, as master of ceremonies, and you have a show that should "rock 'em in their seats."

Stanford Art Gallery
Has Unique Collection of Paintings on Show

A unique and noted collection of paintings is now on exhibit at Stanford Art Gallery. It is perhaps the most unusually collected art collection in California. Most collections of art are the result of individual wealth or the acquisitions made by art institutions. This collection, however, is one started as far back as 1921, by the graduating class of the Gardena High School in Los Angeles, through purchase prizes, until now the assembly has become a noted one for the artists' work included and the subjects selected.

As the collecting has proceeded, it can be noted from the gift plates on each painting that the school library staff and the school faculty, not to be outdone by youthful art activity, have also participated by purchases of artists' paintings for addition to the school collection.

The group of paintings received for this collection have been so many that it will require two exhibitions to display the entire group. The present showing will continue for two weeks, to be followed by the second group of the collection.

The Art Gallery is open to the public every day of the week without admission charge, between the hours of 10 and 5.

AIRPLANES LINED UP FOR FOREST FIRE CONTROL WORK

Aerial forest fire control in national forests of California will be carried on this summer with five airplanes just signed under contract by the Forest Service. Regional Forester S. B. Show announced that the planes, all privately owned, were contracted as part of the preparedness plan for what may prove to be one of this State's most dangerous fire seasons.

Three planes will operate for the 18 national forests from Oakland Airport near the Forest Service supply base at Government Island.

Arrangements Completed For School Site Purchase

In escrow: One deed from the Carmel Land Company to 22 acres of the Hatton Ranch, proposed site for the Carmel high school; one warrant for $31,000; one letter of instructions from the Carmel unified school board.

This was the net result of a special meeting of the school board Wednesday morning when the four members, with Appointee Charles K. Van Riper, not yet sworn in as a member, absent, prepared for any eventuality regarding the purchase of the site.

In case of a Federal PWA allotment, the board will thus be ready to act at once to complete the purchase of the site; failing this, if any other better plan presents itself, the board can cancel the warrant and alter its plans to suit the moment.

Prior to action Wednesday, the board had the word of District Attorney Anthony Brazil that it could legally act without Van Riper, who has not returned to take his seat on the board. Such action also avoided any possible legal tangle over the fact that Van Riper is a stockholder in the Carmel Land Company, owner of the site which the board decided to buy before Van Riper was named to the board July 1 by County Superintendent of Schools James G. Force.

The deed, warrant and letter of instruction are in escrow with the Salinas Title Guarantee Company, according to Mrs. Doris Watson, board chairman. The site of 22 acres, of which approximately 16 acres are usable for buildings and playing fields, is opposite the end of Ocean avenue and southward along the coast highway for 1100 feet. It is a rectangle 671 feet deep.

Post Office Building Possibilities Remain Same, Says Anderson

In a letter from Representative Jack Z. Anderson to Capt. J. Shelburn Robison, Carmel Business Association president, the status of Carmel's hoped-for Post Office building remains unchanged with little chance of receiving speedy action.

"They (Procurement Division) have the matter on the list and, in due time, I feel sure Carmel will be reached."

Anderson adds: "As you know, Congress will likely adjourn by the end of this month and I doubt if anything will be done insofar as the building at Carmel is concerned, until the next session of Congress."

Advertisement of bids for leasing of a post office location are posted in Carmel post office.

COUNTY HEALTH REPORT

Undulant fever, dysentery, poliomyelitis and food poisoning featured the county health report this week. Camp Ord again had food poisoning with 25 cases. There were three cases of undulant fever, three of dysentery and one of poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis). Measles was at a low ebb with only five new cases. Other cases: Syphilis, 3; chickenpox, gonorrhea, mumps, 2 each.

Miss Doreen Martin arrived yesterday from Vancouver, B. C., and is the guest of Miss Cecile Hampton.

Carmel Legion Post Has Good Average In Disaster Relief Call

Carmel mustered 54 Legionnaires, 23 auxiliary members, three physicians and surgeons, five firemen and members of the rescue squad, three police officers, six Boy Scouts, one scoutmaster, besides the Red Cross ambulance and driver, in last Friday's disaster relief call sponsored by the American Legion.

The order to stand by came over short wave and regular radio channels and proved a successful test of the veterans' organizations and affiliated groups ability to respond in case of emergency.

Corum Jackson, disaster chairman, and Jack Schroeder, of the American Legion Carmel Post, reported on Carmel's roll call.

Speeding Fine Stands As Appeal in Case of Mrs. Bolin Dismissed

Mrs. Kathryn Bolin must pay her $10 for speeding after all. Because her attorneys, Argyll Campbell and Ralph O. Marron, did not file a statement of appeal within the time allotted, the appeal was dismissed by Justice of the Peace Ray Baugh in Monterey court last Saturday on motion of Deputy District Attorney Kal Y. Sapiro and William Luis Hudson, Carmel city attorney.

The long-drawn out case opened May 13 when Mrs. Bolin was formally charged with speeding 43 miles an hour in a 15-mile zone, May 2.

One result of the case was the change in the state law regarding red lights and sirens on privately-owned police cars, now legally-permitted.

Miss Sally Fry, after spending a few days at home after her stay in Mexico, has joined relatives on a ranch in eastern Arizona for the summer.
